Honorable David A. Stockman, Director
Office of Management and Budget
Washington, D.C. 20503

Dear Mr. Stockman:

I have just learned that members of your staff have raised questions concerning subsections 501(a) and (b) of the draft "Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1982," which we submitted for Administration clearance last month. The purpose of this letter is to emphasize that Bill Casey and I are convinced that these administrative provisions are necessary to implement the President's determination to enhance the nation's intelligence capabilities and to promote the more efficient and effective performance of intelligence functions. We also believe that subsections 501(a) and (b) of the draft Intelligence Authorization Act are fully consistent with the President's concerns in the area of government spending.

STAT

Subsection 501(a) would also enable us to overcome obstacles to personnel assignments caused by our inability under current law to compensate employees for expenses associated with the breaking of leases when it becomes necessary to reassign personnel overseas before the scheduled completion of headquarters tours. The estimated cost of solving our problems in this area is only _____ per fiscal year. Bill Casey and I believe that these costs are minimal when compared to the benefits that would accrue from the enhancement of our ability to transfer our personnel where and when they are most needed.

Subsection 501(a) is also designed to provide us with the flexibility to act quickly to ensure the effective performance of authorized intelligence functions, and it is deliberately broadly drafted with this purpose in mind. We view this flexibility as essential in an age of dramatic political change, where unforeseen expenditures may be necessary to ensure that the President and his foreign policy advisors are provided with the best possible intelligence upon which to base their decisions. On behalf of Bill Casey I can assure you that this authority will be used prudently, with the President's desires in the area of government spending always kept firmly in mind. There are also built-in institutional checks upon the exercise of this authority, including the budget authorization and appropriations processes, and our constant appreciation of the need to avoid the creation of inadvisable differentials between intelligence personnel and other government employees overseas which could cause severe morale problems or raise cover concerns.

Subsection 501(a) is, in fact, designed in part to secure the elimination of troublesome discrepancies between Foreign Service and CIA benefits which tend to arise whenever new benefit provisions are enacted for the Department of State. It is, for example, unclear whether several of the new benefits recently enacted in the Foreign Service Act of 1980 can be provided to intelligence officers under existing law. These benefits include family accompaniment of employees on certain types of temporary duty, travel for necessary dental care abroad, and visits by children to employee parents with whom they do not regularly reside. The estimated cost of adopting all of these benefits for intelligence personnel under the provisions of proposed subsection 501(a) is less than $200,000 in fiscal year 1981.

STAT

In closing, let me emphasize that Bill Casey and I have personally reviewed and approved every legislative proposal presented in the draft fiscal year 1982 Intelligence Authorization Act. We believe these proposals are both necessary and in accord with the President's national security and economic policies. We are confident that we can count on your support.

Sincerely,

B. R. INMAN
Admiral, U. S. Navy
Deputy Director of Central Intelligence
